CELEBRATE CHRISTMAS IN THE RIGHT SPIRIT

Now that Christmas looms large ahead of us and every day more imminent, may we not ask ourselves why it is that the once beautiful custom of Christmas giving has fallen into disrepute? Why has the most universally beloved holy day on the calendar become in anticipation not a day of joy and gladness, but a day looked forward to with apprehension?

The answer has its root far down in the past, in the days when the spirit of Christmas was a reality. We have taken the season whose essence was symbolized by the giving of gifts, and we have lowered it into a day of barter. We have given freely to those who will return in kind. Where we have reason to expect lavishness we have given freely; where we know that the recipient can return but little, our gift, only too often has been correspondingly small. Then, having taken one of the most beautiful of impulses—unrestrained generosity—and made it into an ugly thing of exchange for mutual benefit, we allow ourselves to complain that Christmas has become no longer a time of joyousness, but a fastidious burden.

Fortunately for those of us who have no gift to give, the spirit of Christmas is still alive. It is still possible to bestow good things upon those who by no possibility can return our gifts in kind. And if, in return, we receive from them a new understanding of the spirit of Christmas, we will have received more than we have given; but the gift will not be a mercenary barter, but one of true value, blessing both giver and receiver.

PRACTICAL PRESENTS FIND FAVOR WITH EVERYBODY

At Christmas or any other time when you are looking for the little accessories that are necessary to make a gift, it is very odd to give such a present, but in this day and age we have grown to appreciate practical things. One young lady may want the books and a dictionary, and the other will be glad to do the housework, the latter will appreciate a gift of a very good advice.

Season's Favorite.

As Hudson real-estate dealer comes, to inflate Alaska real-estate such a gift, this season, a real gift is one of the three-quarter lengths will make a magnificent and practical gift. A fine example of a woman's gift should
